No Use to Hoard Money.

During the panic of 1907 money was hoarded and three per cent. had to be paid in New York to secure currency. There is no danger of this happening again, since Congress has provided for a billion dollars of emergency currency. No matter how serious the European war there will be no advantage of hoarding money, since all having bank deposits will have no trouble in getting currency. So long as it is certain that money can be had on demand, few depositors will run the risk of fire and thieves by withdrawing their money and hiding it.

This is a particularly good country to live in just now, and with European nations weakened by a great war we have a still greater future.—Burlington Free Press.

The Educational Report.

A summary of the report submitted to Gov. Fletcher by the Vermont educational commission has been made public. While it does not give a complete idea of what the commission has found and recommended, it does reveal the wide investigation made and the importance of the changes proposed in Vermont's educational system. Should all the recommendations be fully considered by the next legislature there would be little use in calling for a sixty day session as the framing of laws to put the system into effect could not be hastily done. It is probable the commission has found and recommended too much, that the legislature will not be able to act on all the suggestions. But that does not detract from the importance of the commission's work nor relieve the press from as full and intelligent discussion of it as possible.

The report is bound to arouse very active opposition. First the college and universities of the state will make an active fight for the large appropriation they have been receiving from the state. Possibly the impression will be created that the commission opposes any state aid to these institutions. It does so far as the granting of state scholarships and direct appropriations are concerned, but it suggests that the state have certain forms of education furnished by the higher institutions of the state for a definite sum, for instance the education of teachers for Vermont schools.

The two remaining normal schools of the state will, of course, be well represented at the legislature in a fight to continue as state beneficiaries. For many years it has been realized by thoughtful persons that the normal schools were not worth what they cost the state but the men back of them have succeeded in saving them. The fight will be renewed this session with the additional force of the commission's verdict.

Further centralization of the public schools will be opposed to some extent but there is no question about the superiority of schools of suitable size over small schools with only one or two pupils in a class.

Another source of opposition will be started by the proposed increase of expense of the system proposed by the commission over the present system. For the year 1913 the state paid for transportation, supervision, normal schools, universities and college, teachers' meetings, etc., $241,596.75. The commission would have the state pay about $750,000 a year exclusive of the institutions of higher education. Such a jump as this is sure to cause inquiry and hesitation on the part of the thrifty.

This article has sought to make clear only the objections the plan of the commission will meet. That is only one side of the case. There is much that will appeal to the people in it, but space will not permit their presentation at this time. We reserve until future issues more complete and favorable discussion of the commission's work.—St. Johnsbury Caledonian.

No European War Here.

There must be no European fighting in America. Patriotism is admirable in its place, but immigrants from the old world must not let love of their respective fatherlands carry them into any serious conflict in this country. The most of those who have recently come to our shores need a word of warning against demonstration of the feuds of nationality that are inflamed by the widespread war in Europe. That sanguinary fight in Los Angeles between a few Servians on one side and Austrians on the other indicates the kind of trouble that might easily arise among men of these and other races in many of our cities. "The Watch of the Rhine" is a noble song to which all may listen with pleasure anywhere in time of peace, but its singing at this time by a crowd of Germans marching down Broadway, New York, is distinctly objectionable. "La Marseillaise" is a lyric that stirs the pulse through the understanding ear, but the Frenchmen of Lenox and Lee who sing it at present in the public streets are acting indiscreetly. The French in Boston do better; they sing it in a hall, at a gathering of their own—singing it not less heartily, and giving offence to none.

The foreign-born who have become American citizens know better than to keep alive the animosities of European races on the footing of equality, and seek to commingle them into that "loftier race" which the poet has said "shall rise, with flame of freedom in their souls, and light of knowledge in their eyes." But hundreds of thousands who are not citizens will have to remain here throughout the time in which the battles of the countries of the nativity are being fought, and it is to be hoped that they will not do any fighting on their own account in the land through whose industries they prosper and by whose laws they are protected. The lack of ocean transportation may prove a benefit to them. They will have time to consider how much better off they are here than they would be in Europe. Many besides the members of the Bohemian Slavonic benevolent societies may decide to ask for American citizenship—which perhaps is the surest way of avoiding quarrels on European questions.—Boston Herald.
